Sample passage:
Incorrect: Margaret, too, was naturally curious, but it never tormented her as it did her sister.
Correct: Margaret, too, was naturally curious, but her curiosity never tormented her as it did her sister.
We must not leave the antecedent to be inferred from the adjective curious.
Incorrect: He is a faithful employee, whom I know will prove a valuable worker.
Correct: He is a faithful employee, who I know will prove a valuable worker.
Who is not the object of the verb know, but the subject of will prove and therefore in the nominative case. I know is really parenthetical; by omitting it, the true sentence structure is readily recognized.
