

On Architecture: Collected Reflections on a Century of Change

The architectural revolution of the twentieth century as witnessed by Americas preeminent architecture critic. Known for her well-reasoned and passionately held beliefs about architecture, Ada Louise Huxtable has captivated readers across the country for decades, in the process becoming one of the best-known critics in the world. Her keen eye and vivid writing have reinforced to readers how important architecture is and why it continues to be both controversial and fascinating. In her new book which gathers together the best of her writing, from one of her first pieces in the New York Times in 1962 on le Corbusiers Carpenter Center at Harvard, to essays in the New York Review of Books, to more recent writing in the Wall Street Journal Huxtable bears witness to some of the twentieth centurys best and worst architectural masters and projects. With a perspective of more than four decades, Huxtable examines the centurys modernist beginnings and then turns her critics eye to the seismic shift in style, function, and fashion that occurred midcentury all leading to a dramatic new architecture of the twenty-first century. Much of the writing in On Architecture has never appeared in book form before, and Huxtables many admirers will be delighted to once again have access to her elegant, impassioned opinions, insights, and wisdom. Looking back, I realize that my career covered an extraordinary period of change, that I was writing at a time in which architecture was changing slowly but radically a time when everything about modernism was being incrementally questioned and rejected as we moved into a new kind of thinking and building. And while it was a quiet, nearly stealth revolution, it was an absolutely a revolution in which the past was reaccepted and reincorporated, periods and styles ignored by modernism were reexamined and reevaluated. History and theory, once considered irrelevant, became central to the practice of architecture again.
