

Peptides in Immunology: Proceedings of a Symposium

Since the mid-1980s, peptides have become increasingly important in almost all areas of immunological research. The symposium from which these proceedings are taken brought together peptide scientists and immunologists to further mutual understanding and to encourage interdisciplinary collaboration. An international collection of authorities in peptides in immunology have contributed to this volume. The areas covered include basic topics such as: peptide vaccines; problems in vaccination; diagnostic and pharmacological issues and topics in allergology.
