Not illustrated. 1899 Excerpt: ...as in the mixture called acamulsia, an excellent emulsifier for both fixed and volatile oils is obtained, the product which it produces being of fair consistency--neither too thin nor too dense. Saccharated Casein is the best emulsifier of all--superior even to acacia. It makes a thick, white emulsion which separates no more than an acacia emulsion. The taste is pleasant, and the oil globules are smaller than in acacia emulsions. Condensed Milk is an emulsifier which may also be said to be superior to acacia. The emulsion does not separate, the oil globules are of about the same size as those of the acacia emulsion, and the taste of the emulsion is more agreeable than the latter. Acacia has also this disadvantage as an emulsifier: it is a gum and therefore a colloidal substance, hence is not absorbed by the alimentary tract. Condensed milk and saccharated casein are, on the other hand, easily absorbed, because of their albuminous and saccharine character.--Bull. Pharm., June, 1899, 228-235. Emulsions--A New Form of Emulsionizer.--John W. Otto has devised the churn and emulsionizer shown by Fig. 40. In it two dashers, A and B, of the same diameter, but one convex, the other concave, are given contrary motion by means of the large gear-wheel, H, which engages the two small ones, G and M. The convex dasher, A, is provided with a number of wings, corresponding to a similar number of depressions in the concave dasher, B, and is mounted on the hollow shaft, Z, bearing the gear-wheel, G, while the dasher, B, is carried by the vertical shaft, D, the latter being rotated by the gear wheel, M, fixed upon it. On rapid rotation, the contrary motion causes powerful currents in the fluid being treated, which rapidly effect the object in view.--Mercks Report., A...
