

Shattered Faith: To Believe or Not to Believe

Do you believe in God, life after death, or nothingness? This book explores the worlds of science, religion, and atheism and integrates them into the aspects of twentieth and twenty-first century physics. It ponders life and death experiences and includes the authors own near death experience. Posing many questions about the realm of our existence, it stresses the importance of promoting humanity without exclusionary elements of human prejudice. These and many other contemporary issues are combined with the latest scientific and philosophic theories in the search for real truth of subjects that have brought down entire empires in bloodlust, and have each of us pondering the eternal, Why? We are in the second century since the collision of science and religion. One is based in empirical evidence; the other is based on thousands of years of pure faith. Hang on as your perfectly ordered world is shaken and stirred - if you have an open mind to believe what is real and allow for possibilities of the yet unknown.
